TOP OF THE MORNING.

Aeroplane Pullmans are the latest. Lower berth, please.

New stated that trusts will cure themselves, if let alone. Yep. Sugar-cure.

"Slang is home-made language," says George Fitch. More. Slang is slanguage.

"Let the child feel things," advises Montessori. Don't worry, Madame. It will.

Aviator Bider flew over the Alps in a thick fog. We'd make the trip under no other conditions.

Herbert Corey, in an article on dancing, characterizes this as "the era of limber legs." And momm's attics.

Governor Colquitt was presented with a ring for Christmas, but it wasn't the same old ring he thought he had a year ago.

Pear, a Minnesota cow, during the past year yielded 13,001 pounds of milk and 605 pounds of butter fat. Pear is a peach.

We venture belief that Robert Bridges, the English laureate, ate too much plum pudding before writing that Christmas poem.

The Illinois justice who performed Christmas wedding ceremonies free and gave a present to each bride is entitled to many namesakes.

CHRISTMAS FOR THE DUMB BRUTE.

One of the larger city papers reaching The News exchange desk carried a news story, which on first reading might provoke a smile, but prompts more serious consideration upon thoughtful perusal.

The story referred to stated that a number of the good ladies of the city had made provision for the feeding of hungry and outcast horses during Christmas week, and for the purchase of blankets for all such animals which were not fully protected from the elements.

Here is a feature of Christmas remembrance which is unusual, yet one which is worthy of nation-wide consideration. Nor should thought for the dumb and patient servants of men be lacking during all seasons of the year.

Right here in Amarillo opportunity is afforded for a manifestation of kindness and mercy. Cruelty, designed and thoughtless, to dumb animals, is not to be condoned, and some steps should be taken to see that such is no longer practiced in a land of civilization.

Consideration for the plodding brute is not squeamishness. It is heartful manliness, fine strong and true. Amarillo is sufficiently large to promote and maintain a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and The News would like to see plans to that end set in early motion.

William Cowper, the English poet, wrote: "I would not enter on my list of friends, though graced with polished manners and fine wit, the man who needlessly sets foot upon a worm."

TRAINED HOME MANAGERS.

This is, in truth, an age of progress. It is an age when expert business methods are being applied in every walk in life, with a view of lessening the worries of the populace, and assuring short cuts to greatest efficiency.

Following adoption of the city manager plan by many municipalities, it is now proposed in all seriousness that there be trained managers for the home.

Get that, dyspeptic pater, who is disposed to quarrel over indifferent biscuits and half-cooked beefsteak, not to mention the colossal bills at the first of each month.

Get it, also, nervous mater, whose household duties interfere in great measure with regular attendance on bridge whist parties and starring in social functions.

Relief is in sight? The School of Domestic Arts and Science of Chicago has established a training school for maids, in order to raise domestic service to the level of a profession. And this institution announces that it will soon be ready to guarantee to each happy home desiring it "a trained housekeeper, who can cook and bake, and order supplies according to the most modern methods of domestic economy."

Here's a promise of what may be expected, from an article in the Chicago Journal:

"The course of domestic training is such that the graduate of the school is competent to take full charge of any household and operate it on scientific and economical lines. She will meet the butcher, the baker and the candlestick-maker with sufficient knowledge of their arts to be able to transact business with them in a businesslike manner. She will be absolute in her domain and entirely responsible for it."

"According to the officers of the School of Domestic Arts and Science, the trained mind will move the household in which she is placed as much money in a year as her wage is higher than that of the ordinary, untrained maid-of-all-work."

"She will do the marketing, not by telephone nor by order boy, but by personal shopping at markets where she is able to see where she can get the best goods for the least money. She is to be so versed in domestic economy that she knows how to utilize food that would be wasted by the ordinary housewife. It is by this knowledge that she will be able to save the money that will pay the difference between her own salary and that of the ordinary maid."

"She will work by system, but be equal to emergencies. She will be able to manage social affairs of moderate character. She will keep books and accounts with accuracy."

"Although this paragon of all the virtues is still in the future, she is in the very near future, according to the faculty of the school."

This is a business proposition, which may appeal to the householder of the future. But The News ventures assertion that matrimonially inclined bachelors, as from time unrecorded, will prefer to follow the old system, hoping, perhaps, that Mary may be able to build a biscuit or perfect a pie like his mother used to make, but loving her none the less if she falls short of this accomplishment.

CLEAR THE SIDEWALKS.

The ice coating of some of the sidewalks in Amarillo this morning will prove perilous to pedestrians, and calls attention to the necessity for clearing these walks at the first opportunity.

Monday morning will prove a good time for the job, Mr. Goodcitizen. Energize.

SUB-CONSCIOUS HAPPINESS.

(By George Matthew Adams.)

The most useful happiness in this world is Sub-Conscious Happiness—the happiness that becomes so dominant in your being that it is controlling—fact and factor in contributing to everything you do. The large majority of people who search for Happiness could find it within themselves if they would but realize that it is there. For, before you can see Happiness in other people you must have Happiness within yourself—Sub-Conscious Happiness.

If your Happiness is Sub-Conscious it will ever and continually radiate its inspiration in every direction.

It is not necessary, even, to Smile in order to be Happy. For Happiness is a realization that you have done something worth while. It is a sort of feeling that you have invested something out of what you are, that is paying a high rate of interest—Happiness is a realization of Results from things done toward a High Purpose.

If your Happiness is Sub-Conscious it will ever and continually radiate its inspiration in every direction.

You often wonder why it is that others, for little reason, pass you in the race, whereas to you your ability seems sufficient to have lifted you on and up. Big purposes and principles reach deep. It is the Sub-Conscious Happy man or woman that so permeates his or her work with Service that before they are seen over there in a bigger position, they are seen over there in a bigger position. You can't grow without being happy and feeling unconsciously that you are Happy.
